HOW HE WAS DEFEATED.

The New York Mail and Express recently related an incident that should be published in every paper in the land.

Out in the great western state of Wyoming a man was nominated for office who was known to indulge quite freely in the flowing bowl. The day and evening following his nomination he took a number of boon companions out and indulged in a great bibulous jollification. One of the men on returning home from the caucus was asked by his wife who had been nominated. On learning his name she promptly said: "That man cannot be elected."

Holding no further parley with her husband, she kept her counsel for the time being, but on the next day she put on her sunbonnet and went and had a good talk over the back fence with her next door neighbor. The neighbor in her turn put on her sunbonnet and held a caucus of two with her neighbor, and before the women of that town got through with those star-chamber sessions of two every back fence in the community was the recipient of confidential political information.

Time went on and election day came. This candidate was overwhelmingly defeated. Knowing that he had not offended his party, he could not understand it. Six weeks later he found out when a little woman of our acquaintance said to him, "We could not let you be elected, Mr. B, because you would set a bad example to our boys."

The brewing and liquor selling interests of Indiana have combined for the overthrow of the Nicholson law, and have really organized a liquor party, which has caused a feeling throughout the state among the anti-liquor people that they must unite against the liquor element.

St. Johnsbury, Vt., knows how to make prohibition prohibit. When a man is found drunk in that city, he is kept in jail until he tells where he bought his liquor, then they go for the liquor sellers.

The price of the FIRST drink is OFTEN, NOW, the value of a character.
